PREFACE.

THE Aysa and Gadabürsi genealogies herein contained are the work of Captain P. Z. Cox and have not been altered.

With the exception of the mark (ˉ) over certain letters, and which has been adopted to designate the Arabic letter ain, names in these genealogies must be read in accordance with the rules laid down by the Intelligence Department of the War Office, by which all vowels are pronounced as in Italian. These remarks do not apply to Captain Cox's tables of the Aysa and Gadabürsi.

The genealogies of the Dáród and Ishák sections of the Sómál have been the work of some six years, and each subdivision has been checked and re-checked, as opportunity offered, during interviews with their elders, and in most cases with the elders of each jilib named.

This has naturally entailed much attention and care, with the result that it may be taken that the main features of the genealogies are correct.

It will be noticed that the Dáród and Ishák sections claim descent from certain noble Arabs; in the case of the Ishák from the cousin of the Prophet Muhamad himself, but such claim has only been recognised in order to obtain a starting-point, and it is not intended that any genealogical question should be taken as proved by the assumption, though the Sómál declare that proof of it is in the hands of the priests at Wahat, a village near Al Hautah (Lahej) in Arabia, and that this proof was treacherously sold to the priests by Ibrahim, nicknamed Sambúr or big nose, son of Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad. Colonel Hunter, C.B., C.S.I., states in the preface to his Sómáli Grammar that he made many attempts to trace this proof with no very great success, but that he did succeed in obtaining a table under circumstances leading to the belief that others were concealed for the purpose of extorting money from the Sómál.

The object of such concealment is obvious, as if such proof were forthcoming the Sómál would be regarded as "Shuruf," or descendants of the Prophet, which would necessarily be galling to the present claimants of this honour in Arabia and elsewhere, who now look down on the Sómál as being of a lower race.

According to the Sómál, the two races inhabiting the country now called Sómáli land are denominated Asha and Háwíya, from the former of whom the present Sómál springs. The Háwíya are not allowed to be Sómál at all, and are stated to be of pagan descent.

Colonel Hunter suggests several derivations for the word "Sómál."

It is, however, curious that the word is not used in maps earlier than the beginning of this century.

A possible derivation of the name "Sómál" has been suggested by the language itself. The Sómál are an hospitable race, and as milk is their staple food-supply, the first words a stranger would hear on visiting their kraals would be "Só mál,"—that is to say, "Go and bring milk." Strangers may thus have named the people "Sómál" from this circumstance. Several Sómál of light and leading were much struck when this origin of their name was suggested to them.

The two sections of the Sómál are the Dáród and the Ishák. The Aysa, Gadabürsi, and Háwíya are not counted as Sómál by the Sómál themselves.

The Dáród section of the Sómál claim descent from Sheikh Jeberti bin Ismäil, a noble Arab who is said to have established himself at an early date in the east of the country, and to have had a son named Dáród, whose descendants are now called after him. Sheikh Jeberti bin Ismäil is, however, buried in Zabíd in Arabia.

He is said to have settled in Somaliland prior to Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad, who is claimed by the Ishák section as their ancestor.

If this is so, it is noticeable that neither Ishák nor Dáród can take back their descent more than 22 or 23 generations, whereas it might be expected that if Sheikh Jeberti bin Ismäil settled in the country long prior to Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad, his descendants the Dáród would be able to trace him back farther than the Ishák section.

According to Sómáli tradition, Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad, who is claimed as the ancestor of the Ishák section, settled at Meit, where his grave is still shown, and converted the aboriginal inhabitants to Islám.

These aboriginal inhabitants of Meit are said to have been tribes known to-day as Jibráil, Magádleh, Darjireh, Turé, Tagálwaak, Aysa, Samarón the founder of the Gadabürsi tribe, Haríya, and Saräes. These were known collectively as Ídúr, who had a son called Dir.

Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad is said to have taken to wife a "Magádleh" woman, by whom he had four sons, the progenitors of the Habr Gerhájis, Habr Awal, Ayub and Arab of to-day, who are thus called the "Ba Habr Magádleh." He also married a Habashi, Galla, or Abyssinian woman, and by her had three sons, now called the Habr Toljaala and Sambúr, and collectively the "Ba Habr Habushed."

There can thus be little doubt as to how the Ishák section are descended, at all events on the mother's side.

The above sons of Sheikh Ishák bin Ahmad are buried at Meit.

Aysa is buried at Eléya above Meit, and Samarón, supposed ancestor of the Gadabürsi, at Dinga, also above Meit.

Meit may thus be termed the cradle of the Sómál race, whence as they increased they pushed out east, west, and south.

The Dáród sections pushed out east, west, and south, gradually driving the Gallas behind the Webbe Shabél, and to this day raiding them on the Tána river.

The Dáród sections thus form the outer arc of a circle having the Aysa and Gadabürsi on the western portion of it, while the Ishák sections form an inner arc.

The genealogies are not a mere collection of names. Each name mentioned has probably descendants though not carried down, and possibly still may, by increase, become a power among the tribes.

It is therefore important to retain the names. Each Sómál youth must of necessity learn his genealogy in order on occasion to save himself being captured and killed as a spy, but this custom is becoming neglected and must become eventually extinct under the influence of the Pax Brittanica, which is gaining ground day by day.

Females are not directly included in the genealogies. It is, however, possible to trace the mother of two or more sons, as collectively they are called by her name, by her tribe, or by her father's name, with the prefix "Ba," meaning "Issue of."

It is important that these should be retained in the genealogies, as the sons of one mother are often spoken of collectively by her name. Instance the Ba Äysa Musa among the Rér Ahmad Nuh (page 24 (499)), which denotes that the woman was an Aysa Musa woman.

Sómál have only one name, and if distinction is desired the father's name must be added.

It will be noticed that the changes are wrung on a very few names, and the Sómál get over the confusion which is caused by this by making a very free use of nicknames, from which Europeans are not always exempt.

The Rér is the thorn enclosure in which the movable huts are pitched and the animals pent up. All individuals within this enclosure are called by the name of the father prefixed by the word Rér.

In the event of a son, sons, family or parts of a family becoming strong, the remaining sons band themselves together under the word Ba prefixed to their father's name.

Should others than sons of one father form an offensive and defensive alliance, they are called Gáshánbur, or brothers of the shield, Damwadága, Húan, &c.

The numbers in italics in brackets on the trees refer to the Summary, a copy of which is annexed to the Compendium of Information on Somáliland published by the Intelligence Department of the War Office, for easy reference owing to their bulk.

The first column of the Summary shows the main divisions, and each succeeding column shows the subdivisions of the preceding column.

For further explanation of terms used in these genealogies the Compendium of Information on Somáliland, published by the Intelligence Branch of the War Office, should be consulted.

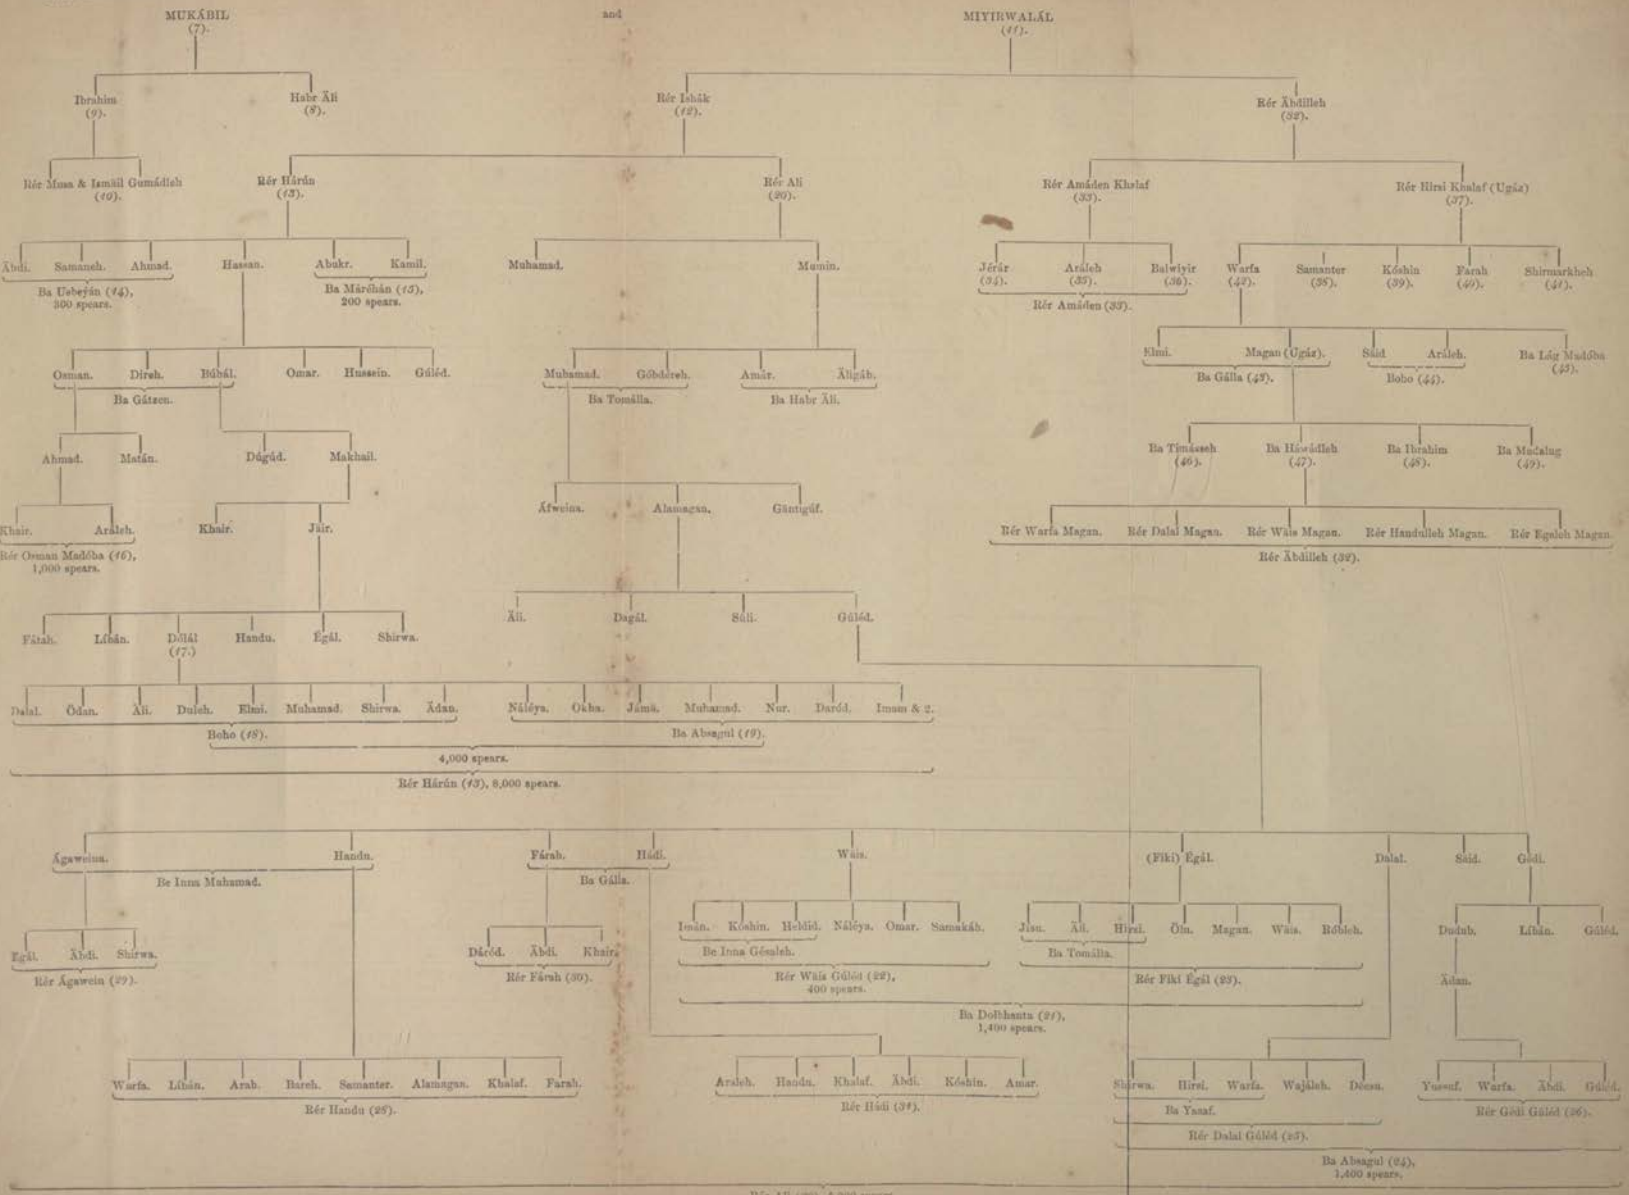
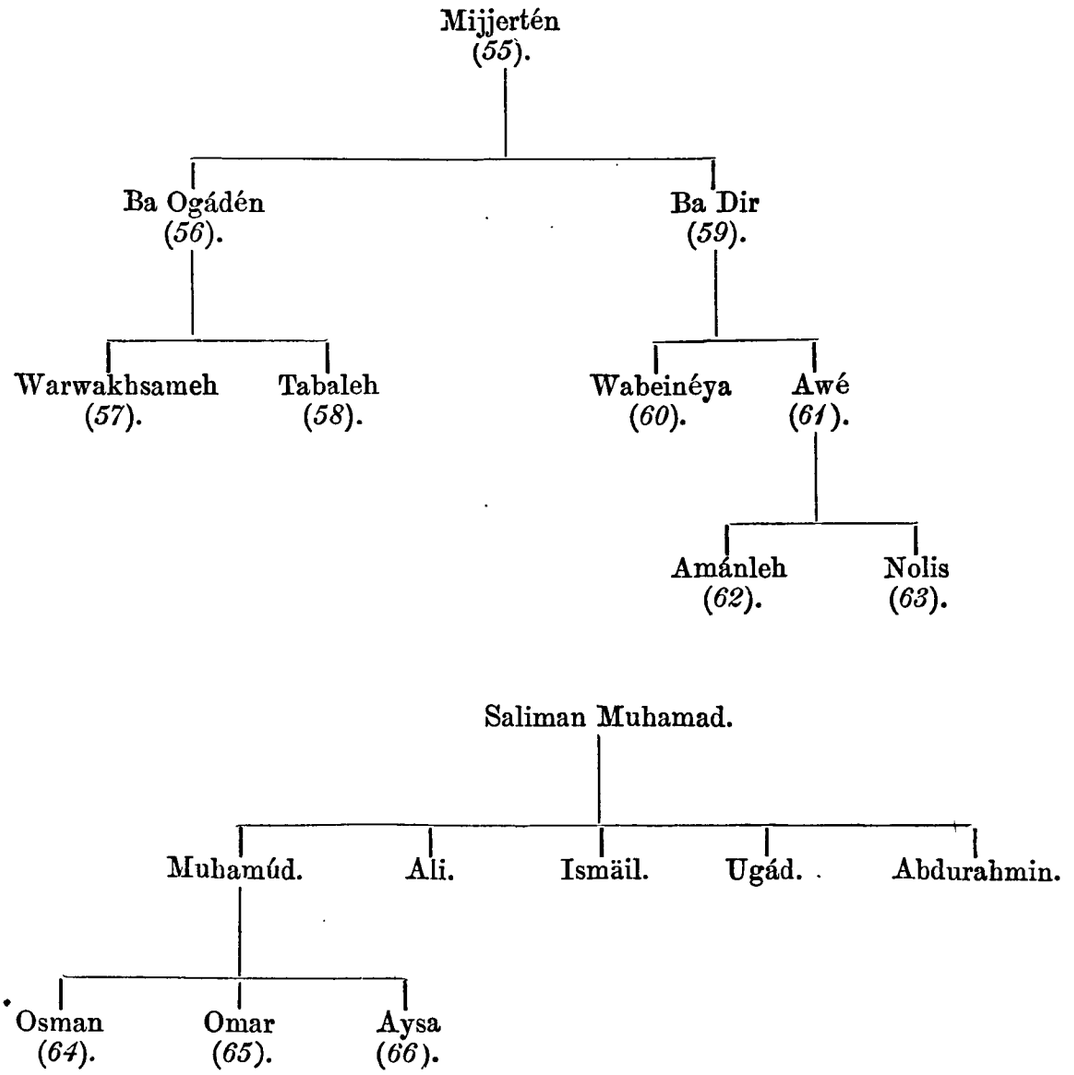
OGÁDÉN (6).
Two main divisions.



The jiliba of the Ogáden are too numerous to enter; there are over 1,200 of them. If united, they could bring into the field some 40,000 spears at least.



The Mijjertén are nominally governed by a Sultan who actually bears this title in contradistinction to other Somál tribes whose ruler, if any exists, is called Ugáz, Garád or Bogr.

The Mijjertén Sultans use only one of four names, i.e., Osman, Muhamúd, Yussuf or Äli. He usually resides at Rás Háfún.

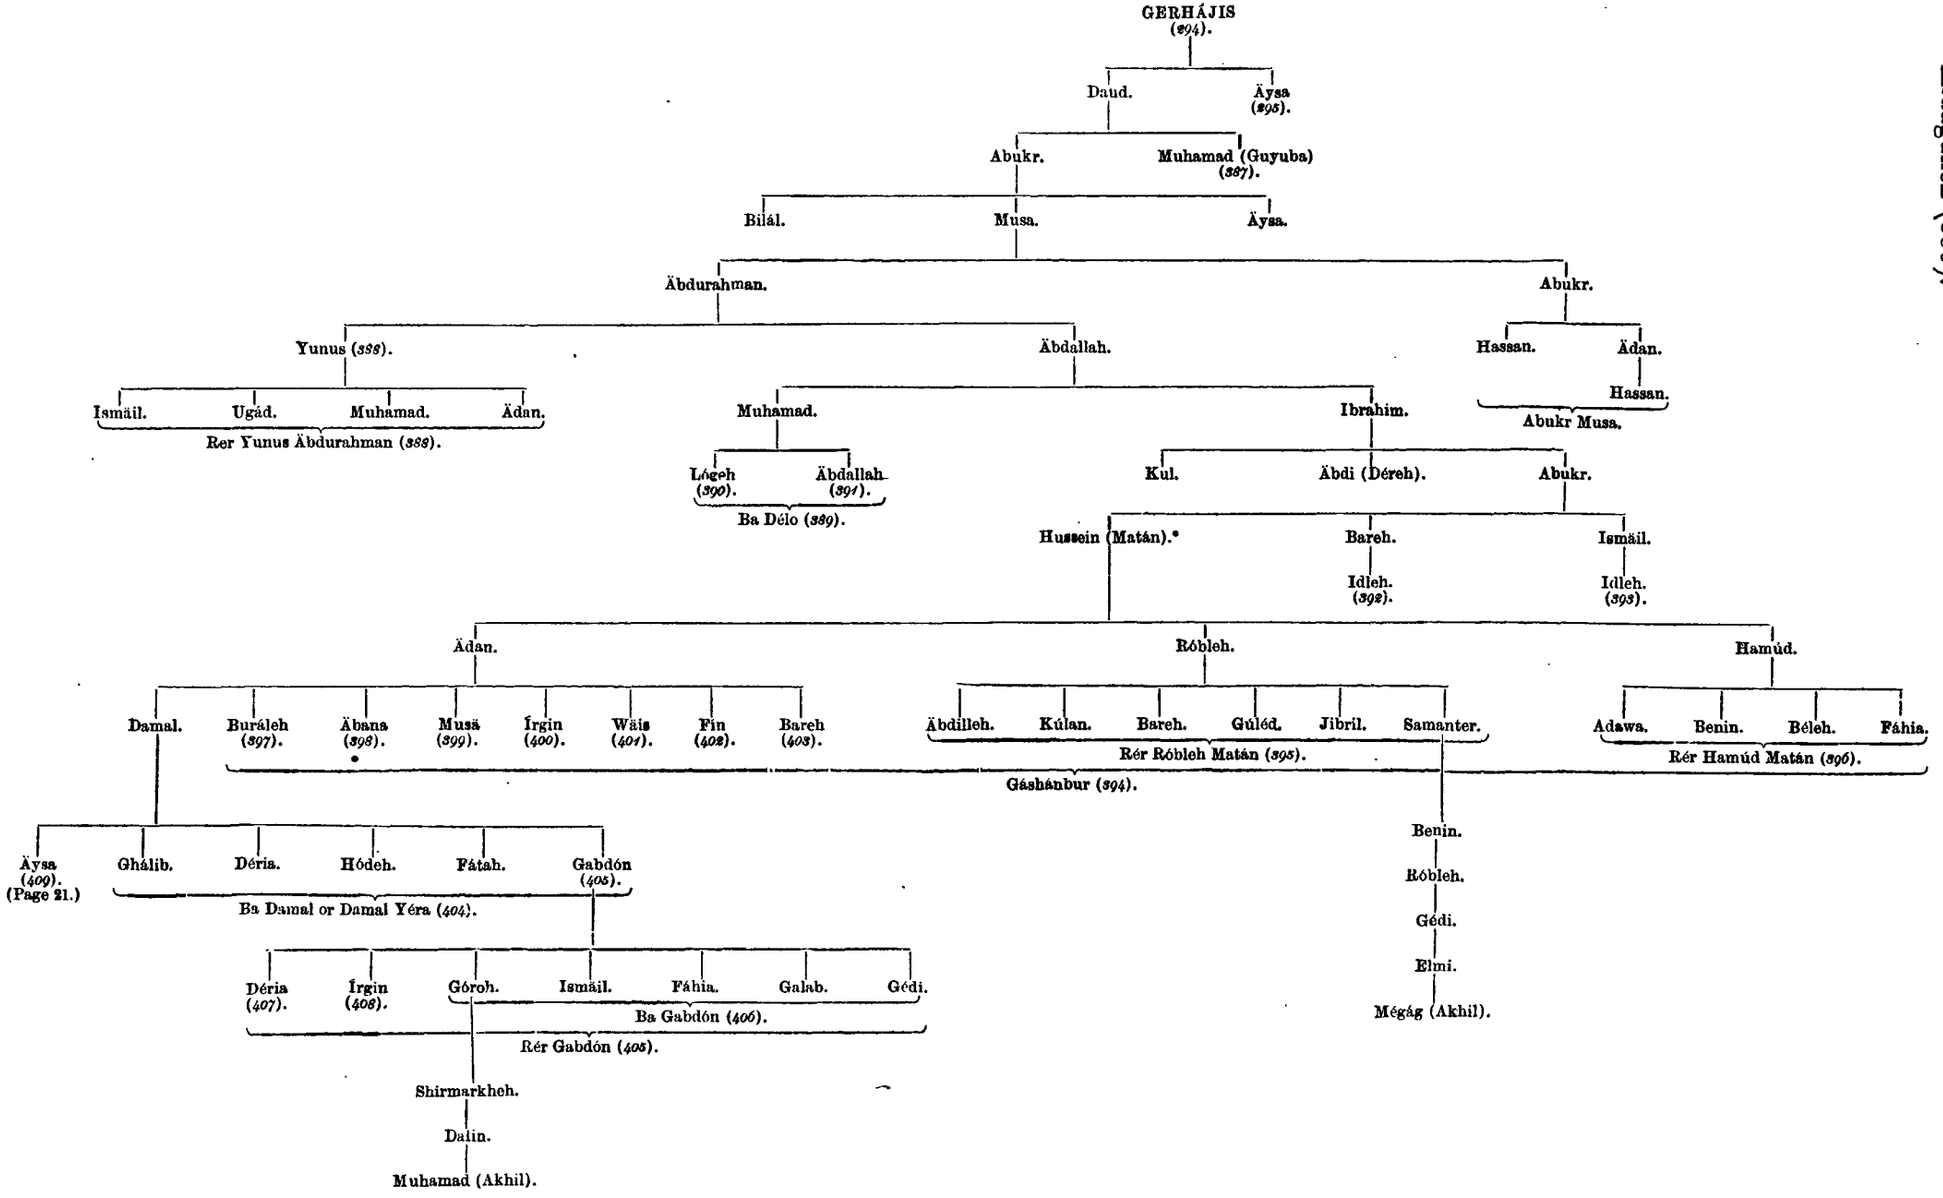
* The Gambur are the Rér Égál Adan and all the descendants of Heldid Muhamad except those of Osman Heldid. The Gambur number about 700 spears.



Matán means a twin, and a legend runs that the other twin, Nur by name, was carried away by his mother through jealousy, and became the ancestor of the Gadabúrsi Rér Nur.

Note.—Aidagalleh was the nickname of Daud Gerhajis, and means one who rolls in the sand or earth.
